bitterly of a custom that some city people have adopted of making the farm people have adopted of making the farm the objective point of their Sunday excursions. There was no object'on to their looking over the fields and stock as long as they closed the gates behind them and kept on the roads and walks, but this they would not do, and furthermore, they paid absolutely no attention to repeated warnings from the management.

The fair weather of Sunday afternoon brought out a veritable horde of pleasure-seekers, who literally took possession of the big farm and overran it like a devastating army. Nofhins that the manager said in the way of requests or even threats had any effect. So, as a last resort, he began to tele-
